Arrests Boy at Dinner.

Detective James Breslin, attached to the West 152d street station, was passing at the time, and he went in to see what the trouble was. When he was told the boy was dead he questioned his compan ions and learned that it was Burke with whom he had been fighting. Burke had gone home during the excitement, and was eating his dinner when the detective found him. He was told that he was wanted for fighting in the street. He did not know the boy with whom he fought was dead until he was told at Police Headquarters.

Then he broke down completely. When informed that he would be held on a charge of homicide Burke was so deeply affected that it was thought for a time a physician would have to be called to attend him. Smith's hody was taken to the Morgue, where an autopsy will be held this morning. All of the boy witnesses told the police the fight was a fair one. James Smith, the dead boy's father, said his son was adept at boxing and recently tried to persuade him to buy a set of boxing gloves.
